The image is naturally centered in the larger view. It's exactly what you want (and need). If you zoom out to the next view, which is also exactly what you want (and need). On the other hand, sometimes you wish you could center on just the document you want, rather than scaling on all of them. When this does happen you zoom out, switch to the new view, change the center, and zoom back in. But this behavior would be removed the function for the largest view. It's just too good to have and I hope Adobe chooses to retain it.
